

My Top & Bottom Eyeliner Experience!

I know some of you brave ladies have already got permanent eyeliner, but for those who are still thinking about it, I thought it would be useful to let you know of my own recent experience...

My top & bottom eyeliner was re-done recently & I was reminded of what I put my clients through when I perform the same procedure on them!

I had a fine eyeliner at the top & bottom and, as you can see in the photo, the colour looks a bit intense to start off with. However, this will heal to a much softer shade of grey - perfect for fair-haired people like me :)

Did it hurt?

This is a question I often get asked about permanent make-up - particularly eyeliner procedures. I have to be honest and say it definitely felt prickly for the first couple of minutes until the anaesthetic got to work. After that, though, it was quite comfortable and got better as time went on - certainly enough for me to have both top & bottom done at the same time. The topical anaesthetics used are very effective! I honestly don't know how people have it done without anaesthetic - ouch!!

What happened next?

My eyes were a bit puffy the next day & sore to touch - but not excessively so - and I really didn't notice any soreness from the second day onwards. Each morning, I cleaned around my eyes with a damp cotton bud but pretty much forgot about them. Six days in, they are almost healed. The little flaky scabs started to come away after 4-5 days and are completely gone now.

The final result?

It will take another couple of weeks for the colour to mature in the skin and the final result to show. Then "Hey Presto" - no more eyeliner pencil!! This will save me so much time & hassle and even if I don't wear mascara, my eyes won't look bare - a real boon if you have fair, or sparse eyelashes. Also, eyeliner tends to be the longest-lasting of all the permanent make-up procedures, so well worth the investment of time & money :)

Want to go ahead?

If you are considering having eyeliner done yourself, I usually do the bottom eyeliner first on both eyes then, providing you're comfortable, I do the top. For most clients, this is fine - however, it's no problem if we have to split the appointments - I like the whole procedure to be as comfortable as possible for you :)

I usually advise you to let them dry-heal, except if you have a very mucky kind of job, in which case you should use the vitamin A & D ointment I provide. Also, you shouldn't wear any mascara or eye make-up for 5-7 days afterwards to minimise the risk of infection. This isn't really much of a problem though - your eyes don't feel that bare as you've got eyeliner on!

As with all my permanent make-up treatments, I provide full aftercare advice & follow through with an email or phone call after 5-7 days to make sure everything is healing as it should.

NOTE: If you have both top & bottom eyeliner done, I'll give you a £50 discount on the individual prices :)

Finally, don't forget, I offer lifetime yearly refreshers at only 50% of the full price. This means you can keep your permanent make-up looking tip-top without breaking the bank!
